Dear Rex,

I saw you in Washington, DC when you performed at our certification luncheon during the International Association of Administrative Professionals Annual Convention and Education Forum. I know you remember us. You were the only male in a room of about 2,000 women. As I recall, we gave you a standing ovation and would have loved to keep you talking for another hour or two.

I didn't have your contact information until recently (just got it from another attendee) or I would have written you sooner. I wanted to let you know that you are by far the most entertaining speaker we've ever had. I really enjoyed your monologue, and hope I get the chance to see you again in the near future.

They say laughter is the best medicine, and if that is true, everyone who attended the luncheon should be very healthy for years to come.

You've been richly blessed with the gift of laughter. Continue to spread it far and wide.

Sincerely,
